Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

Weather of Concern

- An area of low pressure developing off the Baja CA coast will tap into significant tropical moisture, spreading it northward and into Arizona and southeast California. Moisture will begin increasing Sunday, with the bulk of the moisture arriving Monday and continuing through the day on Tuesday. Scattered to numerous showers, some with heavy rain, will develop area-wide Monday and continue thru Tuesday as the low off Baja ejects inland to the northeast. Embedded thunderstorms with heavy rain are also expected, especially Tuesday afternoon and evening.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

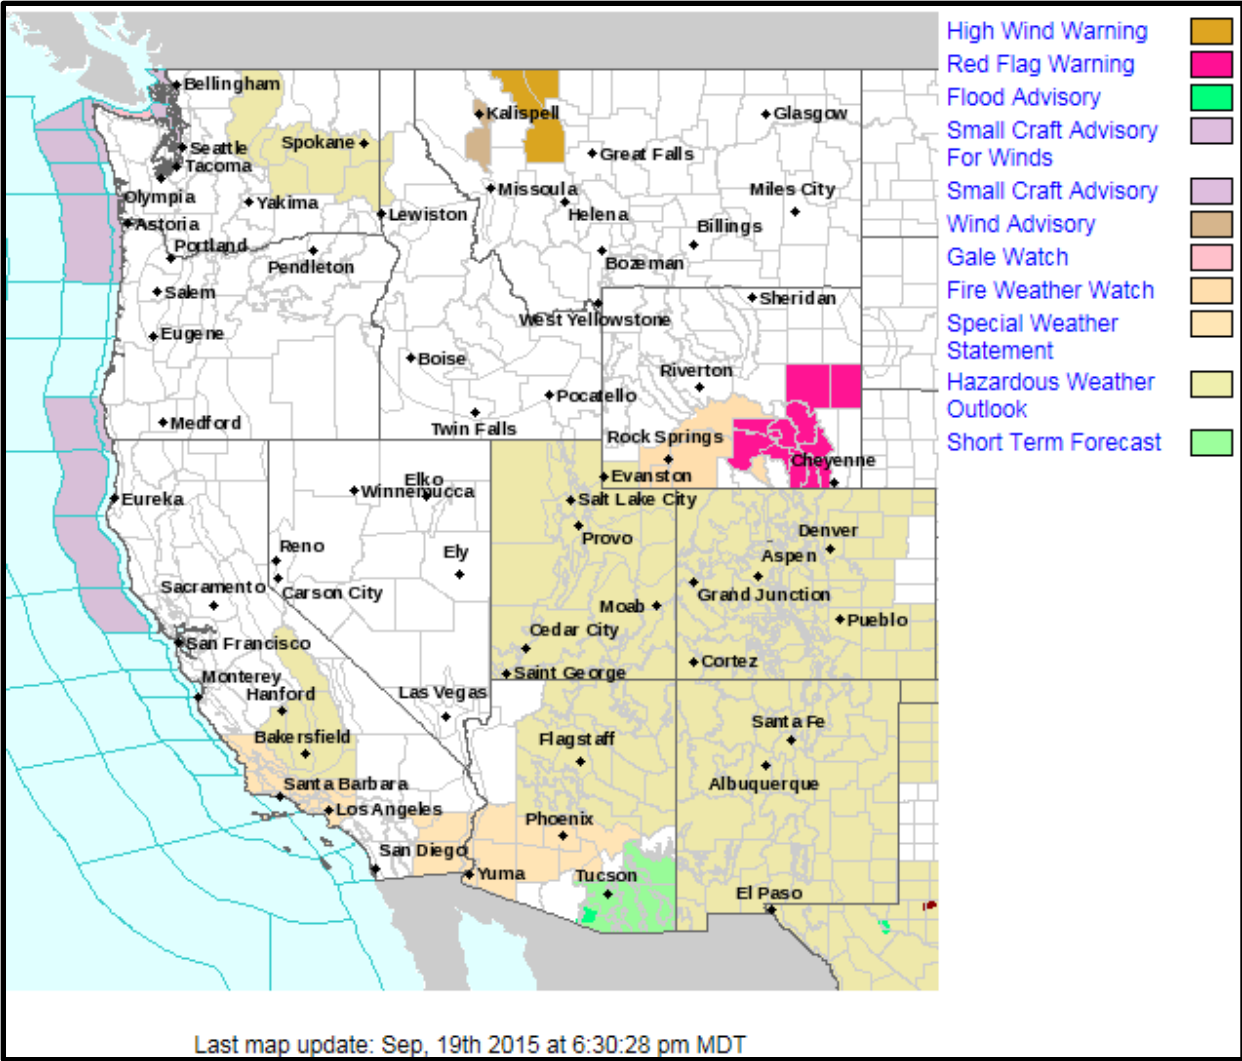

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure will be over the Northern California area through Sunday, then will gradually be replaced by a low pressure trough dropping in from the Pacific Northwest early next week. A warming and drying trend is underway, and a light north to northeast or offshore surface wind pattern will enhance the warm and dry conditions from the lower Western Sierra slopes to the coast until Monday. The peak wind gusts will only reach 23-27 mph in wind-prone areas during nights and mornings, with isolated spots seeing stronger winds. In coastal areas, winds will turn onshore each afternoon. Afternoon temperatures will be 5-8 degrees above normal and humidity will drop to 5-15% in inland areas. Poor overnight relative humidity recovery is also expected in many areas. As the trough moves over the Northern California area early next week, onshore flow conditions will develop, leading to a deeper marine layer and better overnight relative humidity recovery, with afternoon temperatures and humidity closer to seasonal normals. A tropical surge in the Southern California area may spread high clouds into the southern end of the Northern California area Monday and Tuesday, but precipitation and lightning are not expected. The overhead trough will strengthen late in the week and produce windy conditions over the higher terrain and east of the Cascade-Sierra Crest, but humidity will be high enough to prevent these winds from being a high risk event. Scattered light rain is possible in far northwest California late in the week as a front stalls over the area.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure over California will cause temperatures to be 10 to 15 degrees above normal across most of the region this weekend, with upper 70s and 80s across the mountains and 90s to 102 in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 8% and 15% this weekend, but humidity will increase to 20% to 40% south and east of Los Angeles County Sunday as moisture moves in from the south. An area of low pressure currently off the Northern Baja Coast will bring showers and thunderstorms to areas south and east of Los Angeles County starting Sunday afternoon and then spread to the rest of Southern California by Monday morning. Scattered showers and thunderstorms will move to the Sierra Monday night or Tuesday morning, with little or no rainfall across the rest of Central California. The shower and thunderstorm activity will end across the region by Tuesday evening as the low pressure area moves off to the east. It still looks as though most of Southern California will receive between 1 and 2 inches of rainfall, with up to a half inch of rainfall over the Sierra. Temperatures will cool significantly to a little below normal across Southern California Monday and across Central California Tuesday. A gradual warming and drying trend will take place Wednesday through Friday as high pressure over Mexico builds north. Winds will be light through the end of next week, except there will be strong downdraft winds associated with any thunderstorm activity.
